THE "PATIENT" PRESCRIBES.

The New York Tribune in a recent issue had an editorial entitled "As to the Wall Street Disease." The Tribune said that:

"Recently New York has witnessed the most gigantic consolidation of interests and expansion of securities in the shortest time the world has ever seen—a thousand millions in one company; a hundred millions, two hundred millions, three hundred millions in many companies. Sometimes they represented new enterprises, often merely the conversion of old enterprises into securities of a new form. In any case, the volume of the securities was always expanded, far above actual cash invested; and the dance went merrily on, to the joy of every investor who received a dollar and a half or more for an old dollar, and of every banker who received his princely commission on the huge release."

Then, referring to the "sudden halt" that came upon these proceedings, the Tribune said that in a burst of candor one man explains that the market is staggering under a load of undigested securities and that another with perhaps almost as much truth, replies that it is staggering under the indigestible securities. The Tribune added that "in any case everybody admits that because of the greed to profit by the amazing temper of the times the digestion of Wall street has been enormously overtaxed." The Tribune adds: "Naturally the patient doesn't like it and complains; but he will get well soon if he doesn't try to shut his eyes to the fact that his own greed in attempting to eat too big a meal in too short a time is the cause of the indigestion."

Of course "patients" seldom like the medicine prescribed by the physician; and good physicians seldom permit the patient to say just what medicine shall be prescribed for him. But the New York Tribune, as well as other Republican papers, admitting that we are afflicted with a "Wall street disease" insist that the "patient" shall be prescribed for the ailment.

Just as the Tribune says, naturally the Wall street "patient" doesn't like the disease—and naturally the Wall street "patient" complains. But unlike other patients, who hope to get well, the Wall street "patient" insists upon making his own prescription; and unlike other people who stand in the presence of contagious or infectious diseases and who insist that they have a right to protect themselves, the editor of the Tribune and other Republican leaders, while readily recognizing the seriousness of the disease, insist that the "patient" shall be permitted to write the prescription regardless of the rights of others and regardless, also, of the well established rule that a sick man is a very poor doctor for himself and is not really in a situation to protect the public health.

The Virginia Enterprise waxes warm over the fact that a Carson printer has enough money to loan on a mortgage. What will the effect be when we inform them that two of the same "craft" in this city are to soon be sitting over the country in an automobile.
